Stephen C. The contrastivist can hold that some reasons or obligations, for example, moral reasons or obligations, are always relativized to one of these special kinds of contrast class, while other reasons and obligations are not. The contrastivist can exploit this: the question under discussion fixes the set of alternatives relative to which the ascription is interpreted. Click. It is in virtue of these arguments that the Pyrrhonist is unable to choose between the opposing sides of the dispute. Shelve Kant and Education: Interpretations and Commentary. But can one really deny the Principle of Disagreement?

It may be suggested that the Pyrrhonist uses the Principle of Disagreement. Seth Vannatta. A second kind of argument appeals to theoretical advantages of contrastivism.
